

Know your human rights

a new online tool to support your advocacy

Advocacy
launch event
3 July 2019

We're working with people who use health and social care services, advocates, and practitioners to create an online health and human rights tool.

The aim of the tool is to provide information on human rights in a way that is accessible, engaging and relevant. The online tool leads the user on a journey empowering them to know more about their rights and the rights of the people that they support.

The tool has been developed specifically for health and social care settings and includes information about the rights that are most relevant in this context.

The British Institute of Human Rights

It guides users to identify whether a decision or treatment in their health and care engages human rights, and if so, provides a series of practical steps and tools for how to raise a human rights issue without going to court.

Having this knowledge and the confidence to identify and raise human rights issues in every day scenarios is proven to lead to positive changes in health and care outcomes.

“I have found human rights to be a powerful tool which make me feel empowered as well as to help my clients feel empowered. Having knowledge of human rights can help to validate wishes or the concerns of someone and give a sense of confidence to take action.”
